

Individual Leadership

R098-ai

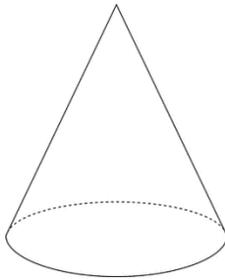

We have a free will choice of how we wish to live our life. Of all of our free will choices, none is more important than our choices to satisfy innate needs.

Edward L. Deci and Richard M. Ryan state:

“The findings have led to the postulate of three innate psychological needs—competence, autonomy, and relatedness—which when satisfied yield enhanced self-motivation and mental health and when thwarted lead to diminished motivation and well-being.”

The point is that what you do as an individual leader affects self motivation and mental health of those within your leadership domain.

Domain Theory

A domain always begins with an individual who thwarts or satisfies innate needs. Your domain as a leader may be visualized as a cone. The top of the cone represents your entry point.

Smart® domains create sense of community by living Smart® habits that satisfy our innate needs, and permitting those within our domain to satisfy their innate needs as well.

Loquate is a ripple organization that touches others in ripples of intentional community building. In 1977 Loquate discovered primary values that build community. Primary values converge as the Smart® habits that satisfy innate needs.

It is faithfulness of carrying out to perfection even the smallest things of doing everything with love, which makes the entry point of a leader’s Smart® domain sustainable for community building. Awareness of innate needs common to all mankind is a means for your entry point based on your love for all.

The central question in satisfying the innate need of relatedness is this. Is a tribesman a tribesman, beyond their hills? If "Yes," congratulations; then your tribe changes to the whole of mankind.

Is the entry point of your domain love for all? By love we mean doing that which is truly in the best interests of others. Love satisfies our innate need for relatedness. For increased motivation and well being, you wish to satisfy your own innate needs of relatedness, competence, and autonomy, and to have all within your domain be allowed to satisfy their innate needs.

They take their lead from your entry point. How you satisfy your innate needs, reflects how they may satisfy their innate needs. If you want increased motivation and well being for those in your domain, the Loquate small group program satisfies innate needs and builds community.
